ABSTRACT

As part of a study of the feasibility and effect of teaching Navajo children to read their own language first, preliminary data on English loan words in the speech of 6-year-old Navajos were gathered in this study of the language of over 200 children. Taped interviews with these children were analyzed, and a spoken word count of all English words used was prepared. The document contains a discussion of English loan words that the children used and the light these words cast on linguistic acculturation; an appendix lists the English loan words according to semantic (subject matter/part of speech) classification; and a 138-page concordance of loan words, prepared by a computer program, provides an alphabetical listing of all words used by the children and interviewers and the sentence context in which the words occurred. Related documents are ED 035 484, ED 043 004, ED 043 005, ED 043 413, and ED 048 584. (NQ)

NAVAJO READING STUDY

Preface

Funded originally by the Bureau of Indian Affairs in summer 1969, the Navajo Reading Study is concerned with the Navajo right to read, studying the feasibility and effect of teaching Navajo children to read their own language first.

A major part of the first two year's work has been analysis of the vocabulary of six-year-old Navajo children. This present paper is an outgrowth of that study, looking at English loan words that the children use and discussing the light they cast on linguistic acculturation.

The concordance program used in the study was written by Jonathan Embry. Marlene Atcitty, Judy Harvey, and Irene Silentman gave useful advice in the analysis of the data.

Bernard Spolsky
Principal Investigator

In a survey of studies of linguistic acculturation in the Southwest, Dozier (1967) points out the importance of socio-cultural rather than structural factors as an explanation of whether a language will be likely to accept loan words. There is, he says, no "neutral contact situation where the speakers of two distinct languages meet as cultural equals" and so no way of testing the influence of structural characteristics.

Most earlier comments on Navajo followed the structural view propounded by Sapir:

> "The Athabaskan languages of America are spoken by peoples that have had astonishingly varied cultural contacts, yet nowhere do we find that an Athabaskan dialect has borrowed at all freely from a neighboring language. These languages have always found it easier to create new words by compounding afresh elements ready to hand." (Sapir 1921:196)

He goes on to speak of a "psychological attitude" of a language, structural characteristics that effect its willingness to accept foreign words.

The dictionary (Young and Morgan 1945) and works by Harrington (1945), Liebler (1948), Reichard (1951) list fewer than forty words borrowed from Spanish, and this after more than three centuries of contact. Young and Morgan list even fewer loan words from English.

As an admittedly extreme example of a tendency to coin a descriptive term to avoid borrowing, they cite for 'tank' > chidí naa'na'í bee'eldǫǫhtsoh bikáá' dah naazniligíí, literally, 'the automobile that crawls about (tractor) upon which they set big things by means of which explosions take place (cannons)!

Haile (1941) writes that there are very few loan words in Navajo: "Pueblo contact has not influenced Navaho to a noticeable degree, while Spanish elements in the language are comparatively few, and English elements practically none." (Haile 1941:1). Reed (1944) explains this as part of the make-up of the Navajo whose "highly independent spirit" involves "a definite disinclination to learn and speak the languages of other peoples."

But in the thirty years since Haile wrote, there would seem to have been a serious change. This change involves the social factors, for the language is still basically as before, capable of elaborate coining of new words from native elements. The amount of contact with English has increased tremendously. A large number of young Navajo men served in the armed forces during World War II. An even larger number left the Reservation to work in war-related industry. Since then, contact with the outside world has continued to increase. As late as 1949, fewer than half of school-age Navajo children were in school, but by 1955, attendance figures were close to 90%. The children now beginning school are the first generation most of whose parents were educated in English-medium schools. (Spolsky 1971)

As a result, while both absolutely and proportionately the Navajo are the largest group of non-English speaking Indians in the United States, and while over two-thirds of six-year-olds still come to school unable to do first grade work in English, the language situation on the Reservation has changed markedly in the last thirty years. These sociolinguistic changes have, as Dozier argued, evidently led to an increased receptivity to loan words.

The present study presents some preliminary data on English loan words in the speech of six-year-old Navajos. In the course of a study of the speech of six-year-old Navajo children (Spolsky, Holm, and Embry 1971), we analyzed taped interviews with over 200 children, preparing among other things a spoken word count. In looking over the data, we noticed early the occurence of a number of English words in otherwise Navajo conversations. In the first interview, a child asked Díkwíísh nináhai? 'how old are you?' replied Five and continued to speak in Navajo.

To investigate the extent and nature of this phenomenon, we went through the complete text of all the interviews and listed all English words. A computer program prepared a concordance of these words, printing them in alphabetical order and giving the sentence context in which they occurred. In this study, we have considered only words that appear in the speech of children, ignoring in the meantime the speech of the adults interviewing them.

There are a number of limitations that need to be mentioned. First and foremost is that our study is based on a corpus, with all its limited relevance to linguistic competence. Further, most of the interviews were conducted in school by school personnel. Generally, the interviewer was known to the child, which led to fuller responses, but the school orientation tended to influence the topic and style of talk.

We generally omitted from consideration most personal names: the widespread use of English first names and surnames among the Navajo is a topic in itself. (Holm, ms.) Only personal names that show strong Navajo influence, like Cháalátsoh, are included. Similarly, we have not taken into account English place names (e.g. Rock Point) except when they occur with Navajo enclitics (Rock Pointdi 'at Rock Point'.

Within the corpus, then, we found 508 different words we classified as loan words, representing 9% of the different words children used in the corpus. Loan words occurred 1549 times, 3.6% of the 33,580 words used by the children in all. These two figures show the great change since Haile's (1941) statement that there were practically no English loan words in Navajo.

It must be stressed that our evidence of the occurences of a word in the speech of one or more children is not conclusive evidence of integration in the lexicon, but it is certainly highly suggestive. In the rest of this paper, we analyze the words that occur from a number of points of view.

Classifying the words by their parts of speech in English, the overwhelming number are nouns. This confirms Young's observation:

> "Navajo does not commonly borrow terms from foreign languages... True, Navajo has borrowed a handful of Spanish and English nouns... But Navajo has not borrowed verbs and other parts of speech." (Young 1948:87).

Dozier (1967:396) points out evidence of how general is their tendency for loan words to be almost entirely nominal forms.

Of the 508 different words, then, 453 are English nouns, 26 verbs, and the rest other parts of speech. The nouns occur isolated, embedded in Navajo, or within English phrases. Almost all the verbs, articles, and pronouns, occur within English phrases which themselves may be isolated as complete utterances or embedded within Navajo.

A number of the words occur in Navajo sentences with affixes attached. A few occur with Navajo possessive pronouns: shilittle sister 'my little sister', (the treatment of this as a single element possibly reflects the fact that Navajo requires age distinction in siblings); shipant 'my pants' (the singular is used probably because most Navajo nouns are unmarked for number).

Many of the words were used with Navajo suffixes: more than twenty different suffixes occur in the text with English loan words. Postpositional enclitics are freely used:

|---|---|
| schooldi | 'at school' |
| dormitorygóó | 'towards dormitory' |

Some English nouns are made into yes-no questions: bookísh? 'is it a book?' Some English nouns are marked as no longer present or functioning: record playeryę́ę' 'the late record player' (the suffix yę́ę is added to the names of people who are deceased, or to objects no longer present or working). When loan words are included in lists, they are not marked by intonation: instead dóó 'and' is used: dóó coyote dóó ma'ii dóó ná'áshjaa' 'and coyote and coyote and owl'.

A considerable number of the loan words, and almost all the verbs, occur embedded in English phrases. Many of these are set phrases:

Hide and go see (sic).
Are you sleeping.
We wish you a merry Christmas.

The phrases are often marked as quotations: spank you, níi łeh 'he usually says "spank you"'; get in line, shi'di'niih 'someone says to me "get in line".'

One especially interesting case involves use of an English verb together with a Navajo verb: jump íyiilaa 'he made a jump'. The more usual way of saying this in Navajo would be dah neeshjįįd, 'he jumped', using a si-perfective form of the verb. But there is an awkward but acceptable circumlocution: dah ná'ńljį́į́h íyiilaa, using an agentless passive iterative form, where the content verb is nominalized. This is what appears to happen in the example: this structure permits using an English verb as thematic and still mark the verb for number, mode, etc.

To sum up, then, almost all the loan words are nominal in form; there is good evidence of morphological integration, and some interesting hints of syntactic modification.

In meaning, the loan words cover a wide range of domains or centers of interest. Appendix A lists the words according to a semantic classification. In general, as might be anticipated, the words generally refer to non-Navajo objects or concepts, reflecting the culture from which they are borrowed. Objects and concepts associated with the domain of school--school equipment and supplies, numbers, time, events, school-book animals--are prominent. A second major grouping are non-Navajo foods. More surprising perhaps are the kinship terms and some of the animal names. But it is reasonable to generalize that the terms generally represent new or alien concepts or objects, and give evidence of acculturation.

Occasionally, interviewers made an effort to see if children knew the Navajo equivalent of the loan words. This happened especially with numbers, and the following translated excerpts show what happened.

1) Int. How old are you?
Child. 'Seven' (in English)
Int. How do you say that in Navajo?
Child. Seven (in Navajo)

2) Int. How old are you?

Child. 'Six' (in English)

Int. I don't understand English. How old?

Child. 'Six'

Int. How do you say it in Navajo?

Child. Six (in Navajo)

3) Int. How old are you, Vic?

Vic. 'Seven' (in English)

Int. How do you say that in Navajo? How do you say that? I don't understand English. Let's count in Navajo: you say it after me. One, two, three, four, five, six, Seven. Now, how old are you.

Vic. Six (in Navajo)

Int. You're six?

Vic. Yes.

In considering the status of these loan words in the lexicon of Navajo, we were interested to find out if they had Navajo equivalents. As a rough check, four bilingual Navajo college students were asked the Navajo equivalent for the loan words: we also checked Young and Morgan for its translation. There is actually a continuum, ranging from those words for which all could agree on an equivalent, to those for which no equivalent is generally known. Five general classes may be identified within this continuum. In the following list, the Young and Morgan translation is given first.

I. Loan words that occur in the text for which all agreed easily on a Navajo equivalent: ribbon - lashdǫ́ǫ́n, purse - béeso bizis, airplane - chidí nat'aa'í.

II. Loan words occurring in the text for which there was general agreement, but minor etymological or pronunciation variants: peach - didzétsoh, didétsoh, jidétsoh; table - bikáá'adání, bik'i dah adání; chair - bikáá' dah asdáhí, bik'idah'asdáhí, bik'i dah asdáhí.

III. Loan words occurring in the text where there was considerable variation in the equivalents offered: apricot - didzétsoh yázhí, ałtsé nit'ánígíí, bégáashii, tsį́į́łgo nit'ánígíí; ice cream - (no Young and Morgan form), tin, abe' yistiní, abe' sikazí.

IV. Loan words occurring in the text where some of the informants knew a Navajo equivalent but others used the loan themselves: bus - chidí diné bee naagéhí, áłchíní neeghéhe, áłchíní bee naagéhí; salad (no Young and Morgan), ch'il, ch'il ałtaanáshgiizhii; lettuce - ch'il, ch'il łigaií.

V. Loan words for which none of the four informants could offer an equivalent: alligator (young and Morgan gives bitsee' yee 'adiłhałhi, but it was not known by any of the four); math, pickle, raccoon.

In general, there were few words for which the informants could not think up an equivalent or translation; on the other hand, they agreed that they themselves would have used most of the loan words when speaking to someone who they knew understood English. More study will be needed before more definite statements are possible about the integration of these words into the lexicon: their presence in the speech of six-year-old children, and their acceptability to college-age bilinguals are, however quite suggestive.

As Dozier's study of Yaqui and Tewa makes clear (Dozier 1956), linguistic borrowing is an excellent area for the study of acculturation. In the case of Navajo, a change of social contacts has in thirty years led to a major change in receptivity to borrowing. Further study of English loan words in Navajo will cast valuable light on the changing linguistic and cultural situation.
